The Enterprise of Education

Opportunities and Challenges for India

JAMES TOOLEY

“My work in India has made it even more difficult to find a sound answer to the question: Why should government intervene in the education? The assumption that only government intervention will help ensure educational equality, in particular, seems most untenable given the Indian experience.”

Professor Tooley has looked at private education in a wide range of developing countries from Argentina, Brazil, Russia, Columbia, India, Indonesia, Peru, Russia, South Africa, Zimbabwe and others. He suggests regulatory reforms that could stimulate innovation in the private education sector and bring about a more equitable development.
